

Learning Network for Active Aging

Bringing together those interested in creating healthy communities by bridging research and practice through an innovative approach of e-collaboration

- Sharing lessons from translational research and best practices
- Serving as a resource for communities interested in implementing evidence-based programs
- Disseminating information about active aging and healthy communities
- Providing a forum for interactions across Smart Growth and Active Aging sectors

www.LNactiveaging.com

www.activeforlife.info

www.nationalblueprint.org

<http://www.epa.gov/aging/>

Support for this program is provided by the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation

Texas A&M Health Science Center School of Rural Public Health
For further information contact: Cathy Liles cliles@tamu.edu